“ I sometimes looked at Arnie, and would swear he was human. When I asked him to put his toys away, he'd pick each one up and place them in the corner where they belonged. And when I asked him to pick up his soccer ball versus his baseball, he knew which one that was. There were times I would wake up in the middle of the night for a glass of water, to return and find him tucked in the bed under the sheets with his head on the pillow. He was into watching television and would sit quietly paying close attention, but then would growl at something he didn't like, even howl when the Devils would win a hockey game. He loved to socialize insuring he spent equal time with each member of the household. He never got angry, maybe annoyed, but it was more for playfulness than anything else. He would only growl just to let someone know not to bother him. He knew when I wasn't feeling well, and would just crawl into my lap, or lay down beside me, and just cuddle until I felt better. For thirteen years, he remained a champ, despite all of his health issues. Arnie was an intelligent, strong, playful, humorous dog, who was full of love, loyalty, and care. I was so lucky and blessed to have him in my life, and wondered what amazing thing must I have done to deserve such a wonderful companion.
